

Kizoom in the news

Publication: Rail Professional

Date: March 2008

Cityspace takes on three new managers to develop rail business

Cityspace, a provider of urban digital networks, has announced the appointment of Andrew Fraser as its chief executive.

As well as leading operations, part of Fraser's role will be to expand the company's established transport division to deliver complete digital network solutions for UK train operating companies. He was previously divisional managing director for public sector firm Civica.

Also new to the company are Joseph Lubczynskyj, who will head up the new business development for rail, and rail project manager Elaine Wright.

